Introduction

The Codeburo was founded in 2013 after I left the agency he was working with and started to develop on a freelance basis. Getting in touch with local and far-off agencies alike, I found that there was a great interest and need for flexible developers to work for small to mid-sized agencies who don't always have the resource they need to pull off a larger project.

I always put the client first - above and beyond the scope of any project. I am looking to make solid long-term business relationships. The long-term ideal makes working together profitable for everybody as each party learns to work with eachother in the most efficient way.

Since then, I have worked with countless agencies building websites, apps, online software, portals, CRM's, e-commerce systems and much much more! I pride myself on my super-flexibility which takes all of your clients' needs into consideration. I like to add that 'flare' as the finishing touch to all of my work and genuinely enjoy making you 'wow' when you see the final product.
